Board of Directors: Navigating Resilience via ESG Strategy

Image source: Freepik.com

The Malaysian Code of Corporate Governance holds the highest leadership of a public listed entity responsible and accountable for setting strategies which leads the business as a resilient one. As the highest governance authority, Directors in a Board is knowledgeable and competent in navigating sustainable development of the organisation.

Board of Directors should have regular discussions on the balancing act and paradoxes that exists where sustainability matters are related. Ensuring that the organisation has adequately assessed all its financial and non-financial risks, which may affect its financial statements, is one step closer in managing shareholder and stakeholder trust in the Board.

Middle management is often left to tackle issues in operations relating to climate risks, supply chain risks, cybersecurity risks, and talent shortages—all of which threaten financial profits. Escalating cost of compliance is another business requirement that is seemingly becoming a mega burden on top of all else.

Board oversight is ever so critical. However this oversight is gained from board competencies and insights when making business decisions. Management relies on Directors' advisory, intelligence and experience in matters relating to Sustainability.

Most importantly the Board is responsible to ensure the organisation's ESG Performance is free from any greenwashing activities. Therefore, Directors will understand to manage ESG Performance data integrity. All Departments in a company rely on the expert advice of the Board of Directors to contribute positively towards the ESG Performance of the business.
